The third reason is, of course, more worthy of consideration, for sugar that sold at 4.40 during the year has its effects on all markets when it drops to 4.27. Whether this figure becomes the normal price level or not, however; it does not portend overproduction or any glutted market. If any slump follows the discounting of this price from present stock values, it but goes to show that bloated prosperity has much upon coming down to earthwhere incidentally as many good fortunes have been made as up in the
